

The Importance of Telling the Story

Contributed by Jonathan Brown Gilbert

Source:

We are obliged to tell the story of our slavery and of our freedom. We are obliged to talk about being and doing and then trusting in unexplainable realities. We are obliged to tell it as often as we can, because each year, as we live our lives day-to day, the internal reality within which we view the world changes. As our reality changes we develop different concepts of slavery and freedom.

The Sages say that anyone who tells the Passover story over and over, that person is praiseworthy.

Through telling and retelling the story, we are linked back through the ages, all the way back to our ancestors who physically left the oppression of Mitzrayim.