

The Fourth Cup: I Will Take You as My People

Contributed by Religious Action Center

Source: The Story of Modern Day Slavery Haggadah

Reader: As our Seder draws to an end, we take up our cups of wine one last time. The redemption is not yet complete. The fourth cup recalls us to our covenant with the Eternal One, to the tasks that still await us as a people called to the service of God, to a great purpose for which the people of Israel lives: the preservation and affirmation of hope.

Group: So we dedicate this fourth cup to all those who labor for the common good in large ways and small, regardless of their origin, station, or faith. And we take heart from the fact that there will yet come a day that all those who yearn for the good and who help sustain it will yet prevail.

Reader: Each day, around the world and here at home, there are cries going unanswered by our fellow human beings. We must work to bring freedom to those still in the depths. It will not be easy. To truly address slavery, we cannot just free individual slaves but must also address the root causes of poverty, prejudice, and inequality that make slavery possible. Our eyes are now open: let us take action on what we see.

- Adapted from Rabbis for Human Rights

For more information on human trafficking, please visit rac.org/human-trafficking.

For all Religious Action Center of Reform Judaism resources, please visit rac.org/Passover.