A woman with short red hair, wearing a red dress and a matching jacket, walks through a crowd of men in dark suits and hats. She is looking directly at the camera with a slight smile. The men are looking at her, some with serious expressions. The scene is set in a dimly lit, possibly outdoor or semi-outdoor, environment.

To gaze implies more than to look at. It signifies a psychological relationship of power, in which the gazer is superior to the object of the gaze.”
