

Monty Python Haggadah: Four Questions

Contributed by Sue Kayton

Source: Monty Python Haggadah

Setting: A dusty street in an small Egyptian city.

Moses: It's time to ask the five questions.

Aaron: Four, sir! It's FOUR questions.

Moses: Right. Thou shalt ask four. No more. No less. Four shall be the number thou shalt ask, and the number of the asking shall be four. Five shalt thou not ask, nor either ask thou three, excepting that thou then proceed to four.

Enter King Arthur and the Black Knight. King Arthur fights the Black Knight. First King Arthur cuts off the Black Knight's right arm, but he keeps on fighting. Then Arthur cuts off the Black Knight's left arm, followed by his right leg, and then finally cuts off his left leg. The Black Knight keeps fighting. King Arthur turns toward the camera with a puzzled look and asks, "Why is this knight different from all other knights?"

Pause. Let the audience groan.

Then continue. Yes, we know that's only one question, but who's counting?
